Modernizing Investment Tools

Surrounding states have:

- More tools available for municipalities to initiate projects on their own
- Lower barriers to obtaining funding
- More flexibility for urban renewal
- Lower tax rates

Idaho:

- Infrastructure development options are either more limited than those in comparable states or more difficult to enact
- Idaho could benefit by loosening funding restrictions in smart, targeted ways in order to respond to the unmet demand for infrastructure investment

Bonding Options

Idaho only allows local governments to use future property tax revenue as a basis for issuing bonds for certain infrastructure projects. Other states allow for non-property tax revenue to be included when issuing bonds like these, taking into account future sales tax, hotel occupancy tax and income tax that would not occur without the development. These states have seen higher economic growth rates as a result. Knowing this, would you favor or oppose allowing Idaho to use future non-property tax revenue to issue bonds to finance infrastructure development?

States like Utah and Oregon allow local governments to use their discretion to issue bonds without a vote of the public to build things like water or sewage plants based on revenues coming in from user fees. This has resulted in significant economic growth and job creation in these states. Idaho requires such bonds to be voted on by the public. Knowing this, would you favor or oppose allowing local governments to issue bonds based on future user fees to build things like water and sewage plants, rather than requiring a public vote to fund such projects?

Uses for Urban Renewal Districts

Favor/Oppose:

Allowing local governments to rebate a portion of a company's future property taxes, for a limited period of time, to incentivize development in urban renewal districts as a way to stimulate the economy and create local jobs.

Uses for Urban Renewal Districts

In some communities, where there are no other means to fund the construction of public buildings like libraries and fire stations, money generated by urban renewal districts has been used to fund these projects. Knowing this, would you favor or oppose expanding the use of urban renewal districts as a way to fund the construction of public buildings like libraries, police stations and fire stations?

A section of downtown Boise was previously designated an Urban Renewal District that included the hole at 8th and Main Streets. Because it was an urban renewal district, the developer was refunded $1 million of their property taxes for a period of 4 years in order to provide them with an incentive to build at the site. As a result, the developer built the tallest building in the state, attracting many new businesses, hundreds of jobs, and millions in additional tax revenue – all in a space that had sat vacant for more than 25 years. Knowing this, would you favor or oppose expanding the use of urban renewal districts in order to grow the economy and create jobs?

Urban renewal districts are city designated areas that can issue bonds to fund construction of basic infrastructure, utilities, and public buildings to enable commercial development. Utah has expanded its use of these districts and as a result has seen some of the highest economic and job growth in the United States. Knowing this, would you favor or oppose expanding the use of urban renewal districts in order to grow the economy and create jobs?

Key Survey Findings

- Both education and economic concerns dominate the issue matrix in Idaho
- While voters strongly support providing incentives to companies to create jobs in the state, they are unaware of where Idaho is positioned in the region when it comes to both the tax and economic climates
- Currently, Idahoans believe improving education would be the best way to improve the state's economy
- Idaho voters believe bonding for public infrastructure is an essential responsibility of government, and they would much prefer bonding to property tax increases as a way pay for public infrastructure
- Strong support exists for urban renewal districts as a way to create economic growth and fund construction of public buildings

Strategic Recommendations

- Pursue other infrastructure development options that comparable state use as key to economic development:
 - GO Bonds
 - Revenue Bonds
 - TIF
 - Industrial Revenue Bonds
 - Local Improvement Districts
- Protect Urban Renewal as only real current economic development Idaho has
- Lower tax rates, broaden the base, keep progressivity

What have we done?

- Met with key stake holders privately.
- Published a white paper with findings.
- Coordinated with BSU (Corey Cook) - Public Policy Institute
- Presented to the Chamber Alliance and to the many legislators
- HOW DID WE DO?

What is next for Idaho 2020?

- Remain focused on investment tools and taxes
- Remain focused on economic development and job creation
- Determine projects for 2016 with an earlier timeline for presentation of the data.
- Continue to collaborate and work with key legislators and leaders to promote a vision for Idaho's future.
